"YOU'LL LIKE OUR GOODS"

TOOLS for the Household

Don't borrow your neighbors' tool—he may loan them to you gracefully but deep down in his heart he rebels. And there is no need of borrowing anyway. Just phone us to send you what you want, or if you are living in the country drop in and see us, the first time you are in town.

We're cranks about our goods—the quality is more important with us than the price. Many years experience retailing has taught us that people will remember the quality long after the price is forgotten.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION LECTURE

The sixth and last lecture of the series was to have been given by Dr. T. J. Allen last Monday night, and his subject was announced as being "What astronomy teaches us regarding the origin of the earth." Owing to illness, Dr. T. J. Allen came in his place and spoke on "Present day views on the origin of the earth and the first chapter in geological history."

Although the title of the lecture was different, the subject matter must have been much the same as that of Dr. T. J. Allen, the point of view alone being changed—indeed it appeared to more than one listener that the title need not have been altered, as astronomy seemed to be more prominent than geology, both in the lecture and in the photographs which illustrated it.

Prof. Allen began by telling how that beneath the sedimentary rocks, of which his former lecture treated, geologists found the pre-Cambrian, Amorphous, Ignorant, Erupted rock, of which granite was the typical example. These, he said, contained no trace of life nor any indication of the action of the sun, being thrown out in a molten condition by volcanic action, it was formerly supposed that the whole interior of the earth was in a fiery fluid state, but later knowledge has discredited this conclusion.

The study of the first chapter of geology led to speculations as to the origin of the earth and of the other planets. And this, Prof. Allen said, remained still an unsolved problem. There were, however, three principal Hypotheses—

1. "The theory of Laplace," otherwise known as "The Nebular Hypothesis," or "Gaseous Theory."
2. "The Meteoric."
3. "The Planetsimal Hypothesis."

The data from which these various theories had been deduced were largely derived from research by means of photography and the spectroscopic.

All the hypothesis assumed the existence of a "Parent Nebula." In the "Theory of Laplace" this Nebula was believed to be "Gaseous."

According to this theory, in the beginning our solar system consisted of a vast extent of matter in a state of infinite tenuity, being of a density only 1-570,000,000 of that of our present atmosphere. This gas was gradually cooling, and as it lost heat it condensed and gained speed.

As the density and speed of revolution increased it bulged at the equator, and finally threw off rings, like those of Saturn, which eventually became planets revolving round a centre—the sun.

The history of the planet was the same process continued—further condensation and cooling until the outer surface of the now fluid sphere became "frozen" into a thin crust, which thickening and becoming compressed formed the solid part of our earth, and the atmosphere condensed into water which, as sea, filled the hollows, caused by the shrinking of the crust as it cooled.

Prof. Allen said that it was not now believed that the whole of the earth's crust was in a molten state, the latest belief being that it was so tremendously compressed that it must be solid.

The Second or "Meteoric" Hypothesis was then briefly outlined. This was attributed to Sir Norman Lockyer and Mr. G. H. Darwin (not the great biologist). In the "Meteoric Theory" the "Parent Nebula" was not "Gaseous" but composed of an infinity of "swarming meteorites" which, coming into violent collision, gave out heat and light, and which, by a process of segregation, became separated into distinct groups, and these, eventually, by the force of gravity, became compressed into planets such as the earth.

The lecturer told of a shower of Meteorites which fell some years ago in Oregon, many being as large as pigeon's eggs, and of another such shower only two years ago outside Toronto. Fortunately, the myriads of meteorites, which are constantly bombarding the earth, are almost always burnt up by friction in passing through our atmosphere, so our readers may still venture to go out at night with meteor proof armor.

ADDITION TO STATION BUILDING

The C. P. R. station is to be enlarged this spring by a 20 foot addition to the south end to accommodate the growing express business. The stone for the foundation walls is now on the ground. It is probable that the yard operation office will be shifted upstairs to allow more room downstairs for local business.

Natural History Society

The Rev. J. A. Shortt, M.A., of Innisfail, who is Secretary-Treasurer of the Provincial Society, and a very ardent student of Natural History, will give an address in the public school, Red Deer, on Saturday next, March 8th, at 8 p.m. The subject will be "The Evolution of our garden flowers from their natural wild form." In "The Garden City of Alberta" everybody is interested in flowers, and the success of the Horticultural Society's show last year amply proved. Here is a chance to learn much of interest concerning our favorite flowers.

Money Market is Now Slowly Easing in Great Britain

London, Feb. 28.—A slow return of confidence in regard to the European situation explains the fresh attention of investigators to Canadian municipal issues. Hopes are marked in new issues of the cities of Quebec, Winnipeg and Moose Jaw. Peace and cheaper money would, of course, greatly accelerate the movement.

Canadian Becomes A Cabinet Minister

Washington, March 4.—One Canadian becomes a cabinet minister on the accession of President Wilson. He is Franklin Knight Lane, who was born in Prince Edward Island in 1864. He was educated in California, however, and practised law there. He was a candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket in that state and received the vote of his party for senator. He has for years been a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission and represented the United States on the international railroad commission.

AN EARLY ELECTION PREDICTED.

Premier Sifton will bring down the estimates at once with a rush, and it is predicted that this can only mean an early appeal to the electors.

MARCH.

A little maiden called at the office the other day and asked us if we would print the following poetry on March in our paper. Respecting her wishes, we do not publish the writer's name, though it is very obvious that some day she will attain fame and distinction.

March, the first month of the year
After winter's dark and chilly drear,
Comes with sweet and refreshing breeze
And sprouting grass and budding trees.

The regular meeting of the Orange-men will be held on Friday night at 8 o'clock.

Sale of work, ten cent tea, grand supper and concert at St. Luke's Parish Hall opening, March 24th and 25th. Keep these dates open for this and you will not be disappointed.

The Rocky Mountain House "Blind Guide" has crawled from cover and now comes out as a howling Grit pack. It found that the independent cry didn't work. It is never wise to sail under false colors because you are always liable to be found out.

Lyrie, Thursday night, March 6th. Standard overtures, characteristic and descriptive music. Popular and standard selections. Artists—Something to please everyone, and recommended by D. Babcock.

A meeting of the subscribers towards the building fund of the Parish of St. Luke's will be held in the basement of the hall on Monday next, March 10, at 8 p.m., to receive a report of the completion of the building and to appoint a Board of Management and Secretary. It is hoped there will be a full attendance.

CURLING NOTES

The winding up games in the Payne, Stephenson and Brumpton Cups are being played this week.

In the Payne Cup, Gibson, Plaxton, W. J. Stephenson and Carswell are out to the eigths.

In the Stephenson Cup, Marshall, Lindsay, Gaetz, W. J. Stephenson, Clarke and Hacking are out to the eigths.

In the Brumpton Cup the finals will likely be played this week. Pidgeon, Campbell and Ruddenham have won out in their respective divisions, and Pidgeon and Ruddenham are drawn against each other, and the winner will then play the final with Campbell.

The final in the Red Deer Cup was played on Tuesday evening last between Campbell and Lindsay and, contrary to expectations, Lindsay won out. Campbell's rink had a phenomenal run of wins and was considered almost invincible. The rinks were A. Mann, H. Smith, Beckett and Campbell skip; McGill, L. M. Gaetz, Turnbull and Lindsay skip. J. C. Moore being away, L. M. Gaetz took his place on Lindsay's rink. The score was 7-13 in Lindsay's favor.

The ladies are busy with the singles competition. Mrs. Murrin has so far defeated all comers and is in the semi-finals.

Popular Ridge

Quite a crowd turned out to meeting Sunday afternoon. Rev. Bennett gave us one of his usual splendid sermons.

Thomas East has gone to Calgary for a few days. We understand he was to be married Saturday evening. Congratulations, Mr. East.

It seems a pity that no teacher is as yet engaged for our school. The children are losing so much precious time.

Chas. Fleming's father and mother, also a brother and sister, have arrived from England, and have taken up homesteads about 150 miles east.

Marrianne

February 24th, 1913. We understand Mr. Yorke is going to be the teacher for this district. Well, we can only say that we have known Mr. Yorke for a number of years, and believe him to be a good man, and wish him every success.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. H. Bleay, formerly of this district, will I know feelrieved to hear of their coming to this district, which took place at Los Angeles on the 10th. Mrs. Bleay underwent a very painful operation two years ago, to which she finally succumbed.

The saw mills are buzzing in all directions, but please, Mr. Sawyer, come a little early next year. Don't wait for our old highly respected friend Robert, or we may do without you.

There is some talk of an organ going into our little school house in the future, and the ladies of the district are getting together for that purpose. The latest is a box social, concert and dance, but as yet there is no fixed date. This I feel sure would be a success, i.e., if they get at it before the work of seeding, etc., the concert especially, as we have something exceptionally good in church work. Evarts News

A grand concert was held in the Presbyterian Church on Friday last for the purpose of bringing the people together and getting them interested in church work. The following were the artists who took part in the programme: Messrs. S. Hastie, B. Brehel and T. Hall, humorists; A. Litt, of Kelowna, and Mrs. Wilcox, of Centerville, and E. S. Hussey, elocutionists; R. Robertson, concertina soloist; Messrs. E. Hall, H. Hill and J. W. Smith, vocalists; Miss L. Walker, accompanist. The leading feature of the programme was a sketch, "Willie and Walton, the World's Worst Wizard's," given by Messrs. S. Hastie and E. S. Hussey, which was of a high tone of humor and very much appreciated by the audience. During the interval refreshments were served and later in the evening a collection was taken up toward the support of the missionary. The chair was occupied by Mr. Simpson, and at the close of the programme Mr. Smith was called upon to move a vote of thanks to everyone who had contributed in any way towards the enjoyment of the evening. There were about 125 people present.

CYNTHIA'S CHAUFFEUR

By LOUISTRACY

A New and Exciting Love Story for Young and Old.

they followed each turn and swoop of his fancy with an active sense of its truth and beauty. And what a brilliant company! How the reds of torch and crescent would flicker on the sheen of silk, the luster of velvet, the polished brightness of morion and spurs. I think I can see those gallant gentlemen and the ladies grouped round the players, as told of the strange pranks played by the Jod of Mirth. Perhaps that same fair Alice, who supplied the motive of the masque as well as its leading lady, may be linked with you by stronger ties than those of mere feminine grace.

Cynthia did not blush: she grew white, but shook her head. "You cannot tell," she said. "Comus" was played in Ludlow only fourteen years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers in New England, and I would remind you that we stocked the new nation in the west with some of the "blue bloods" of Britain. Even in this hall there were Puritans whose ascetic tastes disappeared of Milton's images, as child-drea play-acting of the brave show made by the gentry.

"My mother's people lived in Pennsylvania for generations," she broke in with a strange wistfulness. "I knew it," he cried in triumph. "Tell me the names of the first-anchers at the Milton Theatre, Ludlow, on that autumn evening in 1634, and warrant me to find you an authentic ancestor."

Cynthia bent a puzzled brow at him. "After this I shall apply myself to Comus," she said with a slight smile. "But you take my breath away; have you, then, delved so deep in the mine of English history that you can people 'most every ruined pile in Britain with the men and women of the past?"

He laughed, and colored a little, with true British confusion at having been brought in to an extravagant mood. "There you lay bare the mammoth," he said. "What clever fellows actors they are! If they grasped the whole of the play, they would have it in their mouths! No, I quote 'Comus' only because on one half-forgotten occasion I played in it."

"Where?"

"The prompt question took him unaware."

"At Fairholme," he said.

"Is that another castle?"

"No—merely a Georgian residence."

"I seem to have heard of it—somewhere—I can't remember."

"He remembered quite well—was not Mrs. Devar, student of Burke, sitting in the car at the castle gate?"

"Oh, we must have been at the fairly. 'I have kept you here too long, for we have yet to Trace huge forests and unharbored heaths.

Infamous hills and sandy perilous
wolds."

before we see Chester—and Mrs. Leland."

With that the bubble was pricked,
and said Ludlow became a busy market-town again, its act long blocked by the barrows of hucksters and farmers' carts, its converging roads thronged with carriages and footmen. Medeham was vouchsafed a gleam of frosty humor by Mrs. Devar's anxiety lest her son should be obeyed her earlier injunctions, and kept tryst at the "Raven" after all. That trivial diversion soon passed, and Cynthia Cynthia would share the front seat
with him in the final run to Chester;
but she remained tucked up in her tonneau, and the dread that kept her there was bitter-sweet to him since he betrayed his increasing lack of confidence in herself.

The rendezvous was at the Grosvenor Hotel, and Medeham had made up his mind how to act long before the red towers of Chester Cathedral glowed above the city's haze in the fire of a magnificent sunset. Dale was waiting on the pavement when the mercenary drew up at the galleried entrance to the hotel.

Medeham leaped down.

"Good-by, Miss Vaanreen," he said,
holding out his hand. "Can you catch an early train to town by hurrying away at once. This is Dale, who will take you to the place, is thoroughly reliable, and an even more careful driver than I am."

"Are you really going—like that?"
faltered Cynthia, and her face blanched
at the suddenness of it.

"Yes, I shall have the pleasure of seeing you in London when you return."

Their hands met in a firm clasp.
Mrs. Devar, too flustered at first to gasp more than an "Oh!" of astonishment, leaned forward and shook his hand with marked cordiality.

"You must tell Dale to take great care of us," she said, knowingly.

"I think he realizes the exceeding trust I repose in him," he said, but the accompanying smile was meant for Cynthia, and she read it as a well that presaged many things.

He disappeared without another word. When a slim, elegantly-gowned lady had hastened to the door from the drawing-room, whence she was summoned by a page, she found two dark-cloaked figures in the act of alighting from a well-appointed car.
Her first glance was at the solemn jowl of the chauffeur.

"Cynthia, my darling girl!" she cried, with a gasp.

"There could be no doubting the heartiness of the greeting, and in that motherly embrace Cynthia felt a repose, security, that she had never before. She was conscious of during many years. But while usage called for an introduction, Mrs. Devar eyed each warily with the smiles of convention.

Mrs. Leland glanced at Dale.

"And who is this?" she asked, seizing the opportunity to settle a point that was perplexing her strangely.

"Our chauffeur," said Cynthia, and a glint of fun showed through the wander of her eyes.

"But not—"

"Even somewhat-tongued Mrs. Leland was at a loss.

"Not Fitzroy, who left us a minute ago. This man's name is Dale. One wonders, though, on an unbusinesslike day, how you doubted," cried Cynthia in a flash.

discomfited.
"Pray why did Fitzroy leave you a minute ago?" was all that the other woman could find to say.

Earl established himself on the hearth-rug with his back to the fireplace. It was high summer, and the lax London heat crept in through the open windows; but the hearth-rug constituted a throne, a seat of Solomon; and his lordship stood anywhere else he would have felt lacking in authority.

"George, my boy, tell me all about it," he said, with a generally paternal air that lent itself admirably to the discussion of a youngster's transgressions.

Medeham had a sense of humor denied to his well-meaning sire. He recalled the last time he had heard those words. He and another sprig of nobility had come up to London from Windsor to leave in order to attend a famous glove contest between heavyweights, and there had been legs on the green before an irate headmaster would even deign to let them. That had happened twelve years ago, almost to a day. Since then he had fought through a great war had circled the globe, had sought in wild places of earth and its mountains for the knowledge of the world, and matters as his father had never known them. A Prime Minister had urged him to take the post of colonial undersecretaryship as soon as he entered the House of Commons. He had been thanked by the Royal Geographical Society for a paper on Kilimanjaro, and had been invited by the Foreign Office to send in any day for a honor in his possession. Months later, he had been knighted by the King.
Somebody had been interested in his statements on the activity of a certain Great Power in the neighborhood of British chief constabularies in the Indian Ocean.

The absurdity of a family conclave
in which he should again be treated as a small boy, and admonished to apologize and be flogged, while it brought a smile to his lips, landed any notion of angry remonstrance.
"By all means," he said, "I suppose you mean that you wish to know what I have been doing since last Wednesday," he said pleasantly. "Well, dad, I have been very busy. You asked me to find a wife worthy to reign at Fairholme.
I have succeeded."

"What do you mean to say you have married her?"

"I have not," he said, "but I am about to. I have just returned from a marriage tour of the world, and I have brought back with me a wife worthy to reign at Fairholme. I have succeeded."

"I have not even asked the lady yet," he said quietly. "I hope—I think —that the idea will be suggested to her, but a future Countess of Fairholme is not to be carried by storm in that fashion. We must get to know her people."

"D—her people!" broke in the older man. "Have you, to stand there and talk such infamously nonsense?"

"Steady, dad!" and the quiet voice grew still more calm though the forehead wrinkled a little and there was an ominous lightning of the lips.

"You must take that back, Peter Van-reen is quite as great a man in the United States as you are in England."

"I have even seen him," said the man who had won a more commanding position—and his daughter, Cynthia, is better fitted to adorn a throne than a great many women now entitled to wear one."

"The Earl laughed, with an immediate display of amusement he was not feeling.

"I am not being given in marriage
by Mrs. Devar. I assure you," began Medeham, smiling anxiously for the fatherly "tell me all about it" was not being borne out by the Earl's petulance.

"You can trust me to take care of that."

"But are you treating me quite fairly?" he asked, "in the matter of the sion of my affairs given by Lady Portcaval, a woman whom Cynthia Van-reen has not yet met, and who is now in her house, and by Count Edward Marginy, a disappointed fortune-hunter,

THE CATTLE QUESTION.

The Calgary Herald has done a good work in showing up the fallacy of the figures produced by the Alberta with regard to the George Lane cattle shipments to Chicago.

Mr. Lane no doubt got a high figure for some of his cattle, which were the finest this great province could produce, but, as the News-Telegram said, there is not another man in Alberta could have done it.

The Alberta stated "cattle did not bring more than 51 cents last fall, yet in the same article it produces letters from Mr. Lane stating he paid P. Burns 61 cents, and Burns stated he paid Lane 6 cents.

It is a well known fact that the few cattle George Lane did make money on were the finest that he, as a lifelong cattleman, could produce, regardless of cost. Such prime cattle will bring fifty cents a pound in the Christmas market.

He lost money on his ordinary shipments, which was proved to the hilt by the Herald.

And he certainly lost money on the primes if he raised them himself, because no man can raise such cattle at ten and a half cents a pound, if all the trouble is counted.

Two members of parliament, Messrs. Turfitt and Oliver, stand out above all others in the House of Commons as anxious that the Jordan government should be dissolved. They have a reason. The former might be able to protect his timber limits from the searchlight of public investigation, while the latter would be able to escape explaining where that $69,500 came from.

ENGLAND AND HER DEAD.

(Chicago Evening Post)

How wonderful are England's ways of nationalizing her illustrious dead! Captain Robert F. Scott and four companions die in the frozen lands of the Antarctic after they have won their gallant fight to bring glory to the name of England. At once the Empire accepts her duty to band their names into the structure of her national tradition.

The Prime Minister of England rises in Westminster to pay the tribute of the government to "the message of a brave, enduring man in the face of a most tragic death" and to declare unhesitatingly that the government accepts the responsibility laid upon it in that message. At once the flags all over the United Kingdom go to half-mast. A memorial service is proclaimed in the historical cathedral of St. Paul.

The "Lords and Commissioners of the Admiralty" in solemn convocations announce that Scott and his companions shall be "regarded as having been killed in action" and that "their story will long be remembered with honor by the navy."

Such things make the heart stir. They have a dignity and a splendor, above all, a solidity of purpose that reveal the virile national tradition from which they spring. Everything that is done for England is more important than anything that is done for any other nation. This is the law of English public life. Of her army and navy, of her journalism, her criticism, her arts. A story about a forgotten British soldier will today receive more notice in London than the most brilliant novel that comes from over the channel.

Most often this equality in English life arouses our antagonism. We are outside of it. The rough ways of democracy could not attain to it, although there are few compensations for the failure.

It is not that we would seek to do less than England. But our very nature takes from us that calm, settled majesty with which an empire can move. We would exalt our heroes to the skies, give generously and enthusiastically to those who depended upon them, raise money perhaps for a monument, and then turn back to our daily life, leaving their fame to take care of itself.

Not so with England. Every agency through which the national tradition expresses itself is now turned once and forever into the sacred task of putting the name of Scott into the nation where stand Drake, Frobenius, Nelson and all their lesser companions. This is a reward for which men will contentedly die.

MAJORITY OF 30 FOR NAVAL BILL.

Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 28.—The proposals of Premier Borden to devote $35,000,000 for the building of three dreadnoughts passed Thursday night, when the second reading was carried following the disposal of the Guilt-halt and Turfitt amendments to the naval bill.

After three weeks of more or less wearisome speech-making, the debate on the second reading wound up with brilliant efforts by the Prime Minister and Sir Wilfrid, both in splendid form.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech was remarkable for several things. He refused to take the word of the prime minister that a permanent policy would be brought down later, and insisted that the government had already decided on a policy of contribution.

It was for this reason that an election should be held to secure the voice of the people. He argued at length that Germany had only the most peaceful intentions towards Great Britain, and that there was no emergency, no danger or no necessity of Canada contributing warships to the British fleet.

WILL CONTINUE POLICY.

In closing he declared that the Liberal party would continue to advocate the policy of a Canadian navy if he believed that it made for imperial unity and local autonomy.

The Guilt-halt substitute amended and the Turfitt amendment were voted down and the motion for the second reading adopted by a majority of 30.

VOTE ON REDISTRIBUTION.

As soon as the result was announced, the vote on the Turfitt amendment, declaring for a redistribution bill and general election, was taken. It received the support of all the Liberals but Col. McLean and four Nationalists, Achim, Laramere, Barrett and Guilt-halt.

The division list stood at 81 yeas to 117 nays, a government majority of 36. When the vote on the main motion to take this bill into consideration was taken, the vote Nationalists, Laramere, Mondon and Boulay, all voted against the Turfitt amendment, joined the other four in voting against the second reading.

This made the division list stand at 116 to 86, a government majority of 30.

On his division Col. McLean again voted with the government.

When the final vote was announced both sides cheered, the Liberals because the government's majority was two less than on the vote on the resolution and the Conservatives because the division marked another stage of progress in the fight for the measure of the bill.

Before the house rose Premier Borden informed Sir Wilfrid Laurier that the house would be moved into committee on the bill Friday.

HON. DUNCAN MARSHALL DEPOSITS PROVINCIAL FUNDS IN HIS OWN NAME

Interesting Point Raised by Mr. Tweedie

Edmonton, Feb. 26.—The principal development of the days in the legislative assembly, has been the deposition of the Hon. Duncan Marshall, before the accounts committee, when he gave the committee the information that public moneys had been turned over to him personally to be expended by him as he saw fit in buying live stock and of other moneys disposed of in different ways.

The admission made immediately after T. M. Tweedie, member for Calgary, had stated his intention of summoning the provincial auditor to review before the committee the system of acting in vogue in the province. Mr. Tweedie said he also would require that certain vouchers dealing with advances of money to the minister of agriculture be presented. Mr. Marshall stated that when money had been turned over to him and that he had placed a trust account in the name of the minister of agriculture, he was subject to withdrawal by cheque over his signature.

The rules of parliament provide that no member or minister of the legislature shall receive any moneys whatever from the government, exclusive, of course, of his sessional indemnity and salary. Accordingly the minister of agriculture, by receiving the moneys, which he admitted, is in a strange position in the event of his resignation being called for.

The public accounts committee was productive of practically all the interests of the day. Government ministers on the committee in one breath announced their resignation, and the investigation of the committee should have the very widest scope, and later brought up every possible technicality to hinder the work of the sitting.

Despite the promises made by the provincial treasurer on the floor of the house over a week ago, the public accounts committee was not available and as a result the committee is forced to divert investigation to the account of 1911.

In order to forestall all future technical objections, Hon. Duncan Marshall, of Gleichen, put through a motion, requesting the house to refer all 1911 accounts to the committee for investigation so that no further delay might be occasioned by obstructive members of the committee.

Mr. Tweedie asked that the committee meet Friday to proceed with the examination of the auditor and of the vouchers covering money advanced to Mr. Marshall. The government majority on the committee decided that the vouchers could not be secured before Monday, and as many members would be out of town on that day, the majority ruled that the next meeting take place next Tuesday.

Mr. Tweedie was successful in getting the chairman to promise that the meetings would be held next week to make up for loss of time during the week of the 26th.

It was intimated that the simple intention given today relative to Hon. Duncan Marshall, was merely one of the minor matters that would be brought before the committee by members of the opposition.

Some of the parliamentarians accepted that when a minister has deposited cash payments from the government above that sum legitimately due him for his sessional indemnity, his salary and his travelling expenses, of which in the case of the minister of agriculture in 1911 amounted to about $7,130, then the minister should resign.

For a minister of the crown under any pretext whatever to accept payment of money from the government of which he is a member other than that to which he is by law entitled of his salary and expenses, is an absolutely and absolutely subversive to the independence of parliament.

It would not be tolerated in any other civilized country, with the British Empire or any state in the United States.

That the scene went on for a moment or so longer. The Hon. Duncan Marshall is unfortunate in that he has to have a great deal of his political conscience, and at some point every session he is compelled to defend his battered political reputation. He is covered with old scars of battle, and defence of his irregular and delicate honor has become a fixed habit. He doubtless dreams at times in a sort of nightmare of the day when he is defended by the famous old slurs of his political defamers in old Ontario. The shades of Cap. Sullivan and the wrath of the Minnie M. come in his dreams, and it is pretty hard for him to take the platform without a fling at his foes. Why he should have so many of his own course a Chinese puzzle, but 'tis a fact.

The Hon. Duncan came out of the scene referred to with hair some what ruffled and several serious bruises in the region of his optic nerves, and he left looking a little like a hero. The honorable gentleman made a nice speech for about an hour, defending his demonstration farm policy with ability and eloquence. One could not help recalling his eloquent defence of the Alberta and Great Waterways deal, and his equally able and eloquent defence of the same deal under his present master Sifton. In like manner he lent his far-famed eloquence to defend the subsidy of $375,000 a year instead of the natural resources and the public lands for Alberta, and through the north country he told the people that it was a splendid bargain. It is not surprising that he now deals with the same convenient eloquence the principle and policy of the Conservative government, that the resource public lands should belong to the province.

The Hon. Duncan is very versatile, he is a quick change vaudeville artist of no mean order, and on a given proposition he can be just as eloquent arguing that same is black as the ace of spades or white as snow, according to the few involved. Salary is an important consideration, and it is all the same—he is equally eloquent. He could doubtless make as good a speech against his demonstration farm policy as he made in its favor, and the inversion offered to, if the salary warranted it.

Last session the minister of agriculture started impulsively to his feet and shouted across the floor of the House to the junior member for Calgary, Mr. Tweedie, that "He was opposed to having every railway poke its nose into Calgary." At the time he was just as eloquent as he is now, and he had even said so. Instantly the member was on his feet and came back into the teeth of the minister, and he said that he had just such a statement. Geo. Howley also rose to his feet, shaking his head across at the minister, he supposed that the minister was just as eloquent and counterchange. Allegations and denial were thrown across the floor of the House until the rising noise was like the sound of a stream running over the Red Deer fire department to a conflagration.

Hon. Duncan had almost finished his speech when he reached this point, and he had talked at great speed, constantly rising until the finish found him screaming about the demonstration farms at about high C sharp, yet in this sharp encounter he essayed still another top note, and with his voice cracking to the shaking of the rafters at his menacing torrent across the House that anyone who stated that he had said what the member for Calgary and Okotoks said, they heard him say they were telling a falsehood. Then the spent and wounded minister was borne gently in a litter carried by his political friends to the shade and silence of the lobby to rest and recover. But, unfortunately for the honorable minister, too many people in the House heard him say what he said, and the gallery heard him make the statement which he denies, for him ever to get away with it. He was not misanderstood, let alone misheard. The statement stands out as one of the biting and contentious points in the debates of last session on railway matters. It was said that he had heard with no particle of uncertainty, and the minister's denial only makes the offence a great deal worse. The people of the south have for a year known what the honorable minister said about railways and the city of Calgary, and they know him for a squealer and a quitter.

Mr. Tweedie followed the minister of agriculture, and it is safe to say that if ever a political record was ripped up the back and rent to tatters, it was the minister of agriculture. Squirring, reddening and paling by turns, he was for the hapless guardian of the demonstration farms no avenue of escape, and he was compelled to sit there like a mouse. The minister was adjourned by Mr. Tweedie and resumed by him at eight o'clock. But the Hon. Duncan was no where to be found, at least he was not in the House. He was speaking. Had he done so he would have had to face the reports of Conservative and Liberal papers alike as to his words in the House, but he did not care to try his sword again. Pleading through his armour, he was horsed combat for the rest of the debate.

A Few Chicks on the Side

"Will, dear, I'm that worried I hardly know what to do. What with butter and eggs and milk so high, it keeps me scraping to pay the bills. And our rent seems about high enough, too. There's Fred's wife bought a few chickens to help out. She says it makes a big difference in her grocery and butcher bills, and that they get a nice little income on the side. They expect to have a home of their own inside a year, and then they won't have to be paying rent."

"I'm mighty glad you mentioned it, Mary. I've been thinking myself that it would be great if we could have a nice little home just outside of town. We could start with a few chickens and perhaps buy a cow later. A little while. Butter and eggs and milk bring a pretty fair price these days. We ought to be able to make a little bit on the side, as well as cutting down our living expenses. You've always wanted to live in the country. Well, if we could get a little place, say about ten acres, near town, I could still work in town and have the poultry farm on the side. In a couple of years we ought to be ahead enough to be able to increase our live stock and have a few cows and pigs, too. Fred was telling me that he bought ten acres, very close to town, and that it was pretty cheap, too, could likely sell it in another year and make a good profit, but he won't want to do that. He only paid $150 cash down and just has to pay $120 a year interest for five years. There's a whole lot less than our rent. And it's the dandiest spot, overlooking the river, and nice neighbors, too. There are only ten of these farms for sale, and three or four have been sold just recently, though they haven't been advertised yet. One fellow has a nice little home there now and a couple of dandy chicken houses, and another is just starting to build. I guess there'll be half a dozen or more homes there in a couple of months."

"Do you know who is selling the property, Will? Couldn't you find out about it?"

"I'm going to be pretty busy for a few days, Mary, but you might call at the Cunningham Land Company's office and find out all about it. It would only take a few minutes for them to run you out and show you the spot, and I can go out later if you like."

*How a cut led to 4 years
of suffering*

Mr. J. B. Arsenault, a Justice of the Peace and station master at Wellington, on the P.E.I. Ry., says: "Four years ago I fell on a freight truck, sustaining a bad cut on the front of my leg. I thought this would heal, but instead it developed into a bad ulcer, and later into a form of eczema which spread very rapidly and also started on the other leg. Both legs became so swollen and sore that I could only go about my work by having them bandaged."

"I consulted two doctors, and tried all the salves, liniments and lotions I heard of, but instead of getting better I got worse."

*How Zam-Buk
cured.*

"This was my condition when I got my first box of Zam-Buk. Greatly to my delight that first box gave me relief. I continued to apply it to the sores, and day by day they got better. I could see that at last I had got hold of something which would cure me, and in the end it did."

"It is now over a year since Zam-Buk worked a cure in my case, and there has been no return of the eczema."

FUEL SUPPLY OF THE WEST

Unlimited Gas Well Wasting Its Flow
In One Spot and Coal Beds
Afire for Century

Over a dozen years ago a party of oil-diggers went by the Geological Survey of Canada into what was then an almost unknown part of the North-West Territories, to find if the reported existence of petroleum in the Far North was a fact.

An oil-bearing outfit was finally set up at Pelican Rapids, on the Athabasca River, and put to work. When the drill had reached a depth of 500 feet it struck gas. The flow was so great that it drove back iron balls that were dropped down the pipe, and the noise of the escaping gas could sometimes be heard two or three miles away. It did not lessen any, and the men were at length compelled to abandon the effort.

The next year they came back, hoping to find the gas run out enough to allow them to resume boring. But when they had cleaned out the hole and drilled only seventeen feet further the gas escape recommenced with such intensity that again they were forced to stop.

Burning for Years
After they went, some one came along and lighted the jet. It is still burning, and has been burning continuously, but it is more likely to have been extinguished now and then during the past dozen years and re-lighted by settlers and passers-by.

The gas flow is undiminished, however, is quite certain, for there is a flame nearly fifty feet high and of very substantial circumference. The Athabasca River, in whose vicinity this effusive gas supply is found, is one of the great waterways of the north. The Peace and Mackenzie Rivers make a path with it that mean almost everything to the industrial future of the North-West, and among their good points is the fact that they all run through belts of gas, oil, tar, and coal lands. There is, for instance, in the Athabasca district, a tract of a hundred thousand square miles that is saturated with petroleum.

Gas, Oil, Tar, and Coal

Coal, oil, and gas are the three wonder-stories of that far corner of the Empire. It has been supposed to yield chiefly fur and pelts, but these products are fast becoming a thing of the past. The whole north land above the present line of rail is a region of mineral wealth, which, in its larger limits, takes the form of the largest gas and oil reserves in the world, and, far more valuable, is a storehouse of low grade. About two hundred miles from the Arctic Circle there is a coal area, on the Mackenzie River, that has been on fire for a hundred years. It has been slowly burning from within, and spreading until now the fire has broken line of low, mysterious earthdome that at night is one of the grandest and weirdest of northern sights.

AN IMMENSE ORCHARD

Fourteen Hundred Acres of British Columbia Fruit Farm

Among the largest individual orchards in British Columbia is one owned by J. D. Anderson, about fourteen miles from Roseland.

Here he owns 1,400 acres, which he purchased when land was cheap, from the Provincial Government. On this tract he has cleared 100 acres and 120 of this was planted with 11,000 fruit trees and about 4,000 small fruits, including raspberries, blackberries, currant and gooseberry bushes.

A majority of the trees are of the famous popular commercial varieties which give the best results in British Columbia. For instance, he has 3,000 Jonathans, 3,000 Macintoshes, and 2,500 Northern Spies.

Trees are planted with a surveyor's transit and a 300-foot steel tape, and from whatever angle they are looked at present symmetrical appearance. A few acres are devoted to potatoes and other vegetables, and more to clover, which yields an immense crop.

Besides fruit, Mr. Anderson has 500 White Leghorn chickens, a number of pedigree Berkshire hogs, a large flock of ducks and five hives of bees, which number of swarms annually increase. Bees are a necessary part of the orchardist's plant, as they aid in fertilizing the blossoms by carrying the pollen from one tree to another.

From fifteen to twenty men are constantly employed in and about the orchard which has been carried along on the best scientific lines, and in such a manner as to make a failure almost impossible.

THEY PROTECTED THE HOME MARKET

Value of Farms and Farm Lands in the United States Has Grown Tremendously

It is abundantly evident that the policy of protecting the Home Market has contributed materially to the all-round development of agriculture in the United States. A comparison of the relative conditions of the agriculturists in Great Britain and United States furnishes convincing proof of this statement. Under the American policy the value of farms and farm property in United States has increased tremendously, as is apparent from the following table taken from the United States statistics:

Year	Value
1850	$ 967,242,589
1860	7,890,493,060
1870	8,944,857,749
1880	12,180,501,538
1890	16,082,267,689
1900	20,514,061,338

In England on the other hand the value of farm lands has steadily decreased. The following extract from the Fair Trade Journal, Vol. 6, page 590, shows the loss sustained by the English nation in respect to land values. "According to statistics published by Mr. Giffen, the capital value of the land in the United Kingdom is $8,455,000,000. This appears to be only its agricultural value, production other than from the surface increasing the capital value considerably. In 1882 lands were valued at $9,490,000,000 so this was a decrease of $945,000,000 occasioned by the ruinous competition with foreign countries in the grain supply, reduction of rents, uncultivated farms and the increase of area laid down in grass for stock raising purposes, which was formerly used for cereals, now imported and also at prices which would not compensate the British farmer for his outlay."

Another threat of the farmers' prosperity is the more recent record. Too often the farm mortgage is given as evidence of financial embarrassment or shiftlessness. In the majority of cases, however, it represents thrift and progress. Many farmers own their property to the fact that they have bought farms and have been able to borrow the money to develop and improve them. The superintendent of the census made a thorough investigation respecting farm mortgages in the United States. In addition to general statistics gathered, a thorough canvass was made by trained statisticians in each county of Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts and New York. Superintendent Porter's summary of the results of the canvass shows that the trade policy followed by the United States has not prevented the farmers in that country from discharging practically all their mortgage indebtedness, except that of recent standing.

ALL ROUND GROWTH OF THE DOMINION

The Favorable Trade and Business Conditions of Recent Years Have Brought Prosperity

Much has been said and written of late about the growth in value of agriculture each year in Canada consequent upon the opening up of new land. Remarkable as this expansion is that in manufacturing is even more striking. In 1910 the total value of manufactured products was $1,164,775,582, whereas the total value of field crops, dairy products, animals, and fisheries was $863,314,659. Even with the addition of mines and forests to field crops, etc., manufactures were only $52,050,095 behind. Here are the figures:

Field crops	$667,185,500
Dairy products	199,000,000
Fisheries, season 1909-10	29,629,169
Mining	105,640,558
Animals and their products	250,000,000
Exclusive of dairy	250,000,000
Forest products	25,000,000
Products in Canada	$1,216,855,657
Manufactures in Canada	1,164,775,582

Statistics show that in the last seven years the manufactured products of Canada have increased in value 140 per cent., and the dairy products 25 per cent., while the dairy products used by the home market have increased $30,000,000 or over per cent. It is evident, therefore, that under the favorable conditions that have prevailed during the past few years coupled with the stable trade policy, there has been an all round development in national activity. This satisfactory growth makes Canadians hesitate to alter policies which have brought such splendid results to all classes of the people.

how it was possible to distinguish between gaseous and solid bodies, the former being indicated by the Bright Line Spectrum and the latter by the Continuous Line.

The third, or Planetsimal Hypothesis, is that generally accepted today, and astronomers hold the idea of One Ancestral Sun in the midst of the countless millions of the Sidereal Galaxy. Our sun is looked upon as representing the central aggregation of one Planetsimal system, being surrounded by separate aggregations, in various stages of condensation and cooling, of which our earth is one of the least if, to us, not the least important.

The lecturer then described the three Aeon or ages of the planet—1. The Formative or Adolescent Aeon, with its six stages of Nebular, Atmosphereless, Volcanic, Initial Atmospheric, Initial Hydro-sphere and Initial Life.

2. The Aeon of Extrusion or Transitional. 3. The Gradational Aeon. In the formative the earth began in a nebular condition, gradually becoming compressed and solidified, when the volcanic expulsion of gases and steam, then the recondensation of atmosphere, followed by further condensation and distillation of water, and finally the appearance of life. He said that in one sense the planets might be said to live, change and die, and described the moon as a dead planet, the internal energy dissipated and the atmosphere destroyed; and the earth was said to be already dying when first life came here to birth.

The second aeon of extrusion was that during which our solid form of rock, the granite, first took form, and the third or gradational age marked the formation of the pre-Cambrian and following groups. The three great aeons might be termed the Hypoethetic, the Partly Known and the Better Known.

A number of fine photographs were then thrown on the screen, illustrating the phenomena described. Amongst them were photos of the Sun and Planets, Saturn, Mars, the Moon, Neptune and Nuclei, the Milky Way, Galaxies, etc.

The lecturer invited questions and several were asked eliciting further interesting information, and a valuable expression of opinion from Prof. Allen that although the discoveries of astronomy and geology quite aside the old idea that the Bible gave the age of the earth as 6,000 years, and that the "days" of Genesis I. were ordinary days of twenty-four hours, they still involved no contradiction of Holy Scripture. On the contrary he pointed out that there was a significant concordance between the order of creation as set forth in the Bible and the latest theory of the gradual formation of the earth—first formless, then the solid appearing, then the separation of the atmosphere and the condensation of the atmosphere, and the condensation of water; and as described in his former lecture, life first appearing in the water, land creatures following, and creation culminating in the man. Prof. Boyce in a few pleasing sentences commented on the lecture, and expressed the thanks of the audience to Prof. Allen, and these were endorsed by a specially appointed general applause.
